

MISSING

© Jo-Anne McArthur/We Animals

HAVE YOU SEEN
THIS CALF?

Female cows aren't milk machines—they produce milk only after being pregnant. On dairy farms, farmers artificially inseminate (or assault) cows on what industry insiders have called a "rape rack." Mother cows carry their babies for nine months, just as human mothers do—but their calves are torn away from them almost immediately after birth and sent to be raised and slaughtered for veal or added to the dairy herd to be exploited for their milk. Mother cows have been known to cry out for days after their babies were dragged away from them. When given the chance, they nurture and protect their beloved calves.

DITCH DAIRY CRUELTY: DRINK VEGAN MILK!

peta2

MISSING

© Jo-Anne McArthur/We Animals

HAVE YOU SEEN THIS CALF?

Female cows aren't milk machines—they produce milk only after being pregnant. On dairy farms, farmers artificially inseminate (or assault) cows on what industry insiders have called a "rape rack." Mother cows carry their babies for nine months, just as human mothers do—but their calves are torn away from them almost immediately after birth and sent to be raised and slaughtered for veal or added to the dairy herd to be exploited for their milk. Mother cows have been known to cry out for days after their babies were dragged away from them. When given the chance, they nurture and protect their beloved calves.

DITCH DAIRY CRUELTY: DRINK VEGAN MILK!

peta2

MISSING

© Jo-Anne McArthur/We Animals

HAVE YOU SEEN
THIS CALF?

Female cows aren't milk machines—they produce milk only after being pregnant. On dairy farms, farmers artificially inseminate (or assault) cows on what industry insiders have called a "rape rack." Mother cows carry their babies for nine months, just as human mothers do—but their calves are torn away from them almost immediately after birth and sent to be raised and slaughtered for veal or added to the dairy herd to be exploited for their milk. Mother cows have been known to cry out for days after their babies were dragged away from them. When given the chance, they nurture and protect their beloved calves.

DITCH DAIRY CRUELTY: DRINK VEGAN MILK!

peta2

MISSING

© Jo-Anne McArthur/We Animals

HAVE YOU SEEN THIS CALF?

Female cows aren't milk machines—they produce milk only after being pregnant. On dairy farms, farmers artificially inseminate (or assault) cows on what industry insiders have called a "rape rack." Mother cows carry their babies for nine months, just as human mothers do—but their calves are torn away from them almost immediately after birth and sent to be raised and slaughtered for veal or added to the dairy herd to be exploited for their milk. Mother cows have been known to cry out for days after their babies were dragged away from them. When given the chance, they nurture and protect their beloved calves.

DITCH DAIRY CRUELTY: DRINK VEGAN MILK!

peta2